The Grassroots Human Security (GGP) scheme was first introduced in 1989, and prioritizes human security for vulnerable and marginalized people within society. To date, 551 GGP projects have been implemented in South Africa since 1990. Sectors of focus include education, health services, vocational training and other basic human needs. One of the characteristics of GGP is that it directly benefits local residents. In the current JFY 2012 (April 2012 - March 2013), the Government of Japan will continue to offer support to Grassroots Projects throughout above-mentioned four countries.
